Reserve Generation 'Drug Free'

Reserve Generation represents the United States Air Force and the United States Air Force Reserve in locations throughout the United States. They entertain and educate thousands of elementary and middle school students each year in cities near military bases for Active Duty, Reserve, and National Guard service members. They perform a unique blend of popular music selected for its positive drug free message with a spectacular light and sound show.

Their show is a dazzling display of laser-like lights and high-energy music that captures the attention of their audience. This 45-minute show of sights and sounds features some of today's popular songs from well-known artists such as Monica, Whitney Houston, and Kirk Franklin. The musical styles cover hip-hop, rap, rock, R&B, and even a couple of smooth ballads. There's something for everyone.

The enthusiasm and professionalism of Reserve Generation has captivated listeners of all ages throughout the United States to include Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; Charleston, West Virginia; Greenbay, Wisconsin; Tupelo, Mississippi; Atlanta, Georgia; New York, New York; and Miami, Florida. They have been sharing their drug-free message since 1990, earning them national recognition and the 1995 Department of Defense Anti-Drug Awareness Award.

The members of the Band of the Air Force Reserve are professional Air Force musicians working in support of the Air Force Reserve Command Drug Demand Reduction Program.
